

Please Don't Forget

written 2/19/1996

Thomas W. Ilvento

It's time for leaving,
time to say goodbye,
I'm going to make a brand new start time for moving on,
time to make a change,
but I just can't escape my heart.

Because I've taken my treasures,
and I've packed them away.
But all of these memories,
just won't go away.

And I know what you're thinking,
you don't have to believe.
but please don't forget, to remember me,
please don't forget, to remember me.

What am I, oh what am I going to do?
When the time just slips away?
We come so far together Helped each one along,
but now it's time I carry on alone.

And I know it's not easy,
and my words can't explain,
why some things need changing,
and others remain

Please don't be angry,
you don't have to agree.
just please don't forget, to remember me.
please don't forget, to remember me.

This song was originally written when I left Kentucky to come to Delaware. I was thinking of the group of close friends I played music with as I wrote. I literally was packing things away to make a move as I thought about this song. I never played it or shared it with anyone. It sort of re-emerged recently. I love this song - it is very melancholily but also sweet. The chords are very nice. It is a song for anyone having to say goodbye to someone (or a group) that you don't want to lose, but must.
